8.3 Other external fees and taxes

Depending on the type of financial instrument and the trading venue, additional external fees may be incurred which are charged to the customer. These include, for example, fees from trading centers, exchange fees from third-party brokers or further taxes (e.g. foreign transaction taxes). The precise or approximate determination of such fees in advance would involve disproportionate expenditure for Zürcher Kantonalbank.

9 Product costs

In the case of certain financial instruments, such as funds and structured products, the provider of the financial instrument may charge fees (including costs or expenses) to the assets of the financial instrument and/or to investors (such as management fees, transaction costs, issue and redemption fees, etc.). These are determined by the provider of the financial instrument and may affect the performance of the financial instrument and/or the issue or redemption price and/or may be charged to the customer separately. Further information can be found in the provider's product documentation (e.g. prospectus, basic information sheet, fund agreement and final conditions). Due to the breadth of the market offering, the precise or approximate determination of these fees in advance would involve disproportionate cost for Zürcher Kantonalbank.

Investments in Swisscanto investment foundations and from third-party providers are associated with additional costs (such as issuing and redemption commissions and further fees). These costs are stipulated in the regulations of the respective foundation and can generally be found in the factsheets of the investment groups.
